aring into white. a she keeps her eyes open, she knows how to hold him, she knows how to set him free. after all, there's no happier place than this. inside her, they can both feel the love. they could fly. The Boy Who Watched Heaven CHAPTER 3 Autumn at the Lake THE BOY LOVES EACH NEW DAY more than the last. He looks forward to breakfast every morning and all his meals. he has breakfast with his parents at eight o'clock. he likes to start things off with a good meal, and then, if he can, he likes to use the time to get a good wash, go to school, and make some friends. but mostly he spends his time reading. it's his favorite pastime. he reads anything he can find—paperbacks and books that he reads in class and books on the shelves in his room. he reads for fun as much as for school. he's a good reader. he really does enjoy books more than any other pastime. the boy is happiest when he's reading, and the words take him to a place he's never gone before. he lives in a world of imagination, where the pages fly past him, and he wanders through a beautiful new life. not every day is perfect, though. sometimes it rains, and he's unhappy, and sometimes the girl doesn't come. then he takes his book, and lies on his bed, and watches the clouds go by. The Boy Who Loved the Sea THE BOY LOVES TO WALK IN THE BOARDWALK ON the beach at night. he likes the way the lights come alive and move in the sea, like eyes looking out into the dark. he likes to sit on the balcony of a boardwalk
